ABSTRACT

Literacy rate of India is key for socio-economic progress. The overall literacy rate of India is 74.04% (female - 65.46%) according to census of India 2011. In this study two CD blocks in Varanasi district were purposively selected and the five villages were selected randomly of each block and 30 women were randomly selected between 18 to 65 years old in each village. The data were conducted through structured interview schedule. In the present study, the result reflected that most of the rural women belonged to nuclear family (62.00 %), 71.34 per cent respondents were literate and the majority of respondents (49.33 %) had agriculture as their occupation. It was observed that the majority of women accepted that the education for the girls is most important and is the key of their bright future. Raising the rural women socio-economic status due to globalization and increasing their importance and socio acceptance in society are most essential.
