ABSTRACT

There is growing awareness, since 1950's about the critical role of human resources in the economic development of a nation. Human capital formation is acknowledged as one of the most potent source in contributing directly and significantly to economic growth. In developed countries like the USA studies revealed and have attempted to quantify the extent of contribution of education growth. In most developing countries the development of human resources has been required as one amongst many objectives of long term economic growth.
